

WEIMA America introduces the TH Series Briquette Press to the Paper Market

WEIMA America is a leader in size reduction technologies which includes both shredding and briquetting equipment. The briquette press has become increasingly popular to compact shredded paper as well as paper dust. In a printing operation a lot of dust is generated from trim scrap and sheeters which is often messy and hard to handle. The press has the ability to compact this dust into briquettes which look similar to hockey pucks. They have a diameter of 2-3" based on the size of the machine. This compacting process uses no glues or adhesives to create this more manageable product.

The TH Series units have large 55" x 55" or 78" x 78" hoppers which allow them to be installed directly under a dust collection system. The machine can be equipped with an auto on/off switch and can be linked directly to the cyclone telling it when to release the material into the press. In the end the briquettes can be easily discharge into a gaylord box using plastic tubing or into a carousel bagging system. The main benefit for the press is the ability to compress loose materials and avoid a messy facility although there are situations where the paper briquettes can be burned and used as a heat source.
